A climate-smart agency.

After more than a year of collaboration in the freelance collective “KRIG Collective”, the core members of the collective have decided to create the remote web agency KRIGio AB.

KRIGio is operated as a “remote” agency and works primary over the internet instead of offices. Internal meetings and discussions are done over the internet to keep unnecessary traveling at a minimum and the digital platform means that people working together don’t necessary have to live in the same place.

CEO Razi Kantorp Weglin och CD Jennie Kantorp Weglin chose to move from the crowded inner city of Stockholm, with agency-work to a house in the countryside in Galvsbo, Hälsingland to continue to run the digital agency KRIGio.

It was about time to develop the community and set up an agency as an alternative form. There is no optimal company structure for everyone, and for us, the best way is to have the mutual office digital. A structure allowing us to be nicer to the environment - and climate - and not miss out on really competent colleagues due to them not living in the big city. I think we are very aligned with how the branch as a whole will look in the future.
